GERMAN TACTICS REDUCE LARGELY RUHR COAL OUTPUT

Miners Dismissed From Work Regarded as Part of Passive Resistance Program

ESSEN, March 8 (By The Associated Press)-The German coal miners in the Ruhr are gradually being dismissed from work, according to the French authorities, who declare 2000 were discharged yesterday from the mines in the Recklinghausen district

It is assumed by the French that these dismissals are part of the German plan to reduce the coal output gradually to a minimum as part of the passive resistance program. The French have occupied part of the Bismarck coal mine near Reckling-hausen because the Germans refused to load coal for the occupational au-thorities. The men closed down all the loading machinery in protest against the occupation. Meetings of the unemployed are being held at various points, according to the French, in protest against the German system of paying strike funds, and there is much unrest among the thousands of miners and factory workers now idle.

At Dortmund 5000 unemployed met and gave notice to the municipality that the strike pay of 2000 marks daily was insufficient and that, unless the sum was increased, they would go to work for the French and Belgians. Those in charge of the payment of the funds say it is impossible to increase the allowance.

The German Association of Railroad Workers in the Ruhr has decided at a mass meeting, the French learn, to send a delegation to Berlin for a con-ference with the Chancellor, Wilhelm whom they will present a demand that strike funds be assured in case of unemployment in the fu-ture. If this assurance is not forthcoming immediately, it was decided to recommend that the railroad workers break their united front of resistance.

All the speakers with the exception of the pan-Germans also hinted at Germany's willingness to negotiate. 'We want, and can reach an agreement with a France that wishes repa-rations, but not with one that desires desires to have more normal relations, Social Democrats said. Alluding to France's fears of an attack from Germany, the speaker added, "German whether a separate treaty which will be comprehensive or confined to reparations, whether a separate treaty which will Germany, the speaker added, "German whether a separate treaty which will workmen form the basis of the German Republic, and would guarantee sailles Treaty will be required, France that she would not be at whether those nations which have

The pan-Germans want more than resistance until the bitter end: they demand counter-measures. Two of these were named by one of their speakers in the Reichstag, namely, the breaking off of diplomatic relations with France and Belgium and coercive measures against the subjects of these two countries, resident in Germany. They do not believe we can avoid the responsibility of establishing peace in the Near East, and the correction of their policy. They do not believe we can avoid the responsibility of establishing peace in the Near East, and the correction of their policy.

The suspicion with which the Turks view all the European nations clamoring for recognition of the concessions granted by the old repudiated governments unfortunately is warranted by the attitude of the governments of the concessionaires. The impression that prevailed at Lausanne was that a spirit prevailed at Lausanne was that a spirit of greed actuates all the governments. The Turks see in the demands of the French and British only a desire to get financial advantages or gain more ter-ritory. Therefore, the only answer of the Turks to both the British and the French is war, if necessary. It is a question of protection of new ideas in government by military means, and the

Turks Adverse to War

There is no doubt that an under-standing exists between the Kemalist Government and the Lenine regime that the latter will stand by Kemal if war actually comes. Germany will have an opportunity of supplying the am-munition. That is the situation as it looks to me and a good many observers. The Turks in their opposition to the British and French are certainly look-British and French are certainly looking toward Germany, and it is not difficult to imagine the effect of Germany.

But it ought to be made clear that the Turks do not want war, but only a maintenance of their Government and the prevention of the encroachments of European powers. It is for that reason that they hope American negotiations will include understandings with Great Britain and France over the question of Turkish policy with regard to the rights of holders of concessions.

nore, it is just as certain that we do not seek financial hegemony or any-thing of that sort. On the other hand, we do demand equal rights and privi-leges. Curiously enough, this compara-tive unselfish attitude has placed us in the position of getting everything that we ought to have from the Angora at the Capitol as he left for home.

Hope Policy Will Affect All While no definite agreements were nade by me with regard to American concessions, it was tacitly concessions, it was tacity understood that such concessions are to be recognized in the making of an American treaty with Germany. That should be looked upon as a great victory. Such a recognition was a big point gained. The Turks should not be blamed, however, for leaving the matter to the United for leaving the matter to the United States Government, in view of the in policy on the whole question of final settlements. of discussion. We will be better able to assess the future prospects when definite reports are received of the new mandate accorded by the Assembly. The brief news aiready available marely demands a settlement of the Mosul controversy within a provisional period and the regulation of financial, economic and administra-tive questions in accordance with the Turkish conception of complete in-dependence for the Nation.

This means acceptance of the na-tional pact and a settlement which will deprive Turkey's creditors of any real security, and render the conduc of ordinary foreign commerce pr

Short of concluding separate treaties two courses appear possible to the Allies. They can either resume the protracted negotiations, with little hope of a satisfactory outcome unless they are prepared to concede practiall the Turkish demands, or after reaching an agreement among themselves, present Angora with an ultimatum informing the Turks that the British Army will remain at Gal-lipoli and the fleet continue to ride the waters of Marmora until the peace proposals are accepted.

Turks Move Next

A considerable interchange of ideas is likely to take place between London, Paris and Rome before any decision is announced. A certain divergence admittedly exists between Lord Curzon and Benito Mussolini, the former maintaining that the policy of sur-render has gone sufficiently far already, whereas the latter favors an almost untrammeled resumption of the

Raymond Poincaré's attitude remains to be seen. He certainly encouraged the Turks to reject the treaty by indi-cating the readiness of France to continue the discussion and subsequently asserting his right to conclude a separate peace. But much water has flowed down the Rhine since that date, and apart from the importance of France's financial interests in Turkey the events in the Ruhr will profoundly influence its Near Eastern policy. In any case, the next move lies with of its the Turkish Government, and it is cation. evident they will not wish to precipitate hostilities anew.

FRENCH ENTIRELY ISOLATE BRITISH

Occupying Forces Can Cut Off Cologne - Mr. Bonar Law's Speech

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, March 8—Reports from Cologne indicate the further exas-peration of the British authorities at the trend of events. Yesterday's French movements brought about the complete isolation of the British sone on all sides, filling up the last gap by taking the Kohlfurt bridge, where a military post was set up which halted all vehicles and scrutinized all per-sons. British Will Not Comply

So far as can be learned, however the British have no intention of complying with either alternative. They are paying careful attention to the status of the French advances up river at Mannheim and other places, which, as stated by Ronald McNeil in Parliament, in answer to a question are held to be illegal. The continuance of the British occupation of Cologne is held to be essential for numerous reasons, notably for the safeguarding of British rights in the future peace and reparations agree-ments, and as a bulwark against the establishment of a Rhineland re-public by force, which is the only way could be engineered.

Mr. Bonar Law reaffirmed the British policy of temporary non-intervention in the Ruhr crisis in the parliamentary debate on Tuesday night on Ramsay Macdonald's amendment, calling for a joint conference between a committee selected from the British, French and Belgian parliaments.

Heavy Loss by France The Premier said, "We are weary of war, but if the line advocated in many of the speeches made were adopted then instead of retaining the entente we would have to go further than making speeches, and prepare selves for the possibility of enforcing our will on France by war."

He also said. "There's no doubt whatever that the French Government has not gained by its adventure in the Ruhr. There has been a heavy loss, and if that continues what the end of it will be I do not venture to prophesy." He then said that the loss was not all on one side, but that the vital part of Germany had been cut, and that the consequences would be

"ruinous to Germany."

He repeated the expressions of his belief that the French operation was a mistake, and that if Great Britain could have prevented it it was her duty to have done so. However, French public opinion was still behind the French Government, and any gesregarded as a hostile act, so nothing that the reparations were not purely -Belgian concern. He dis-

Limits of Objectives

It would indeed be desirable that the precise limits of the objectives of the Ruhr policy be laid down. There has been so much assertion that France has completely changed its inreparations but security, which would zed by the Versailles Treaty, that it s time the Prime Mnster should personally dispel this wrong belief, if in fact it is wrong. The French press campaign was without any doubt in favor of seizing the opportunity of getting out of Germany conditions which it was unable to get in 1919. In effect, the newspapers said France could not go into the Ruhr on any other ground than that of reparations, but being in the attitude is-let us change everything in the earlier peace settlement that on reflection we do not like.

It would appear that the premature publicity given will not help, but rather hinder the cause of those who wanted the complete renovation of the treaty. The government does not wish to be pressed too far in this direction, and still protests that its plans have not changed from the begin-

Commenting on Mr. Bonar Law's speech, it is stated that the British Providence in the permit further encourage. As there is much in the fresh meth-tile tendency in the Paris press where it has been urged that France, to fix in a convention the results obtained by its new policy, must not be dragged back into the rut of inter-allied con-ferences which would prevent France obtaining its own way. This publicist, curiously enough, while not repudiating this idea, seems to want to make it forgotten in the protestations that the very people who are partisans of the French policy of obtaining the great-est possible measure of reparations and security, are precisely those who, in the future hope in spite of the present difficulties for the closest co-operation of France and England.

If the strength of Germany was less redoubtable, if there was not such a disproportion between the populations of the two countries, then France could leave England out of her calculations. An economic alliance with Germany could be concluded without any menace for national independence. The argument is that France cannot break with England and must not be betrayed into any real union between France and Germany. A Franco-German union is the basis of the only possible continental bloc that could be turned against England. It is now suggested that all France seeks is some support which will replace that of Russia. ort which will replace that of Russia

There are six fraternal benefit societies now doing business in Massachusetts on an unsound basis with inadequate rates, Clarence W. Hobbs. J. F. Jackson Tells Legislature of District Attorney Considering Railway's Endeavors to Prevent Overcrowding

Wait for the second car if you do Within a few days decision will be not wish to be squeezed and fammed taken on the advisability of appealin the first, was the substance of the advice given today before the Commitadvice given today before the Committee on Street Railways of the Massachusetts Legislature by James F.

trustees of the Boston Elevated, appearing in connection with two bils ordering the return to Jacob A. Hirsch
Very Civer of Jacob A. Hirsch

The two legislative proposals for checking this condition on trolley cars differ. The petition of James J. Mellen, Representative from Boston, would limit the carrying capacity of a trolley car to 25 per cent over its seating capacity, setting a fine of $50 for each passenger carried over this limit. Eben W: Burnstead would add to the authority of the public trustees power to direct that additional services and facilities be employed when it appears from investigation that conditions of congestion and overcrowding exist.

"American Habit"

Mr. Jackson, discussing the question of overcrowding, declared that it is undeniable that passengers will crowd in the first car when another with the same destination is almost imbehind it. He said that "this is an American habit" and can be controlled by a penalty that would hardly be popular.

There are practicable methods of relief, however, Mr. Jackson declared, and these are being employed. For the past four months every car fit use has been pressed into service at the rush hours, 200 new cars have been purchased—70 of them delivered —and bids will be opened on 100 more tomorrow. The other important means to relief is making subway facilities universal, adapting out-grown track and station area to conditions, the chairman said, adding that progress constitutes reasonable time in such a has been made in this direction.

Points to Cleveland

Mr. Jackson touched upon the is now well under way, as valuable in solving problems of congestion. In meanwhile, he said, the public should be informed of conditions, employees can aid by their co-operation and patience. He also proposed that an attitude similar to that in Cleveland, "where the people take an interest and pride in their railway" be taken, pointing out that in that on a libel brought in 1921. In conclusion, Mr. Jackson urged the enactment of the bill for the establishment of a metropolitan planning board. CIVIL LIBERTY

Dr. Hadley Says Course Is Fall River. What Students Make It

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 8-Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, president emeritus of Yale, in a lecture in Battell Chapel today on "The True Purpose and Value of a College Education," said that the "college course is not what the graduates or the professors make it, but what the students make it." The lecture was a required one for fresh-men. Dr. Hadley said:

men. Dr. Hadley said:

The distinctive purpose of the American college has been the training of citizens for the exercise of civil liberty. According to the relative value which a nation sets on technical efficiency and on civil liberty its universities will be groups of professional schools like those of Germany, or groups of colleges like those of England. The German boy goes directly from the tutelage of the high school to the freedom of the professional school; the English or American boy goes from school to college where he can continue school studies in a university atmosphere, and be dies in a university atmosphere, and be gradually trained for the exercise of civil liberty—a liberal education in the original and true sense of the word.

It does not make nearly so much difference with the training for citizenship what subject are taught in the curriculum as how they are taught. After all has been done that graduates and faculty can do, the main responsibility for their own education rests on dies in a university atmosphere, and be bility for their own education rests or the students. You cannot train a man for liberty by keeping him in leading strings. The college course is not what the graduates or the professors make it, but what the students make it, and what the students make it depends on what they put into it.

When the whole amount was taken over by prohibition agents legal difficulties resulted.

Another point, upon which drys allege the purpose of the law is being defeated under a technicality, concerns what constitutes reasonable time, in instituting forfeiture proceedings. In the Keefe case 11 months elapsed before the proceedings, and this was considered too long a wait in the court's opinion. CHILD LABOR ISSUE NOT TO BE DROPPED

Senator Shortridge in Boston Address Says It Will Be Pressed in Next Session

Restriction of child labor and immigration are two subjects held to be vitally important by Samuel M. Shortridge, United States Senator from California, and he made them both the subject of his talk at the March luncheon of the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts today at the Copley-Plaza, where he was guest and speaker.

Senator Shortridge is on the Sen ate Judiciary Committee and chairman of the sub-committee having consideration of five propositions for amending the national Constitution. The Congress which has just gone out failed to act on the child labor measure and he announced his intention of bringing it up again next December and urging its passage. As presented to Congress the bill reads 'The Congress shall have power, concurrent with that of states, to limit or prohibit the labor of persons under the age of 18 years." BETTER OPERATION OF DRY LAW EXPECTED

HARTFORD, Conn., March 8 (Special)-Improved prohibition law enforcement is expected by dry leaders to result from the firm stand which Gov. Charles A. Templeton is taking on the issue. The Rev. G. Herbert Ekins, assistant Anti-Saloon League, reports that he has received from 30 school-teachers in the State letters declaring that many children are better clothed than they were before the prohibition amendment came into existence.

FRENCH OCCUPATION OF RUHR AS SEEN THROUGH GERMAN EYES

Complaints Rest Chiefly on Ability of Aliens to Buy Goods Which Depreciated Currency Denies to Germans

German newspapers, and many well-meaning German sympathizers, complain that English and American newspapers fail to describe truthfully conditions prevailing in the occupied Ruhr district. In cases involving so much of racial bitterness as this the word "truthfully" is apt to mean to each faction an exposition of its own views. In order however. of its own views. In order, however, that the distinctly German view may be presented the Monitor republishes the translation of an article from the Muenchener Neusten Nachrichten, by Max Mantell, purporting to describe "Small Town Life in the Occupied District." It will be noted that me of the complaint hangs upon the ability of the aliens in occupation to purchase goods, which the Germans with their depreciated currency cannot afford to buy. The same condi-tion obtained in the district occupied by the American troops, yet their withdrawal was deplored by the Ger-man residents who profited by their of American occupation likewise were Then comes a French woman, followed by her black attendant who carries her basket and an additional bag under his arm. Without hesita-tion he pushes the German women aside and upon the nod of his mistress reaches for the best the market offers, puts it in his bag, and on top a duck, a rooster, a pair of squabs. "Combien?" asks Madam, pays her money and rus-tles away, with a cloud of perfume trailing behind. With the advancing day, the number of marketing French ladies increases. It is not pleasant to get up early, the bed is too comfortable in the morning; however, this is market day.

Notwithstanding this, it was learned Notwithstanding this, it was realised officially that permits have been granted to export whisky, ostensibly for medicinal purposes. It was explained that the applications were "regular" in every way, and that the prohibition unit could find no grounds on which to deny these permits.

However, the department was said to be suspicious of such applications, which have increased noticeably since the State Department adopted the policy of forbidding the prohibition navy from going out beyond the three-mile limit for rum-runners, except under certain conditions. That most of this "export" liquo eventually finds its way back to the United States through subterranean channels has been proved, and it is to prevent this that the subject is receiving attention now. Authority to withhold permits is held by the unit. Applicants are required to state the destination of the liquor, consignees, purposes to which it is to be put, etc. The consignees, in turn, are to be investigated more thoroughly to make certain that they are not "dummies" for a rum smuggling plan.

Mrs. Mabel Walke Willebrandt, As sistant Attorney-General of the United States, in charge of prosecution of liquor cases, said:

"If the leaks of liquor through permits were stopped more would be done to make the United States dry and uphold the Constitution than 'raids' on hundreds of stills."

It is understood here that John Holley Clark, chief assistant United States Attorney at New York, will ome to Washington shortly to discuss with Roy A. Haynes, Federal Pro Commissioner and other federal officials, the question of liquor withdrawals for "export."

At the prohibition headquarters i was pointed out that the recent trip seven-year-old son, William Harrison of O. G. Forrer, special assistant to Mr. Haynes, to several European countries revealed that there was no demand abroad for American liquor for

The problem of landing in a fog was discussed at length. One method which was under investigation was the laying of a cable somewhat in the form of a race track with straight sides and curved ends. This would carry an electric current which the airplane pilot could detect by means of instruments, and (it was hoped) enable him to locate the confines of the landing ground.

Those of Lord Glenavy BELFAST, Feb. 24 (Special Correspondence)—The delegates to the Ul-ster Unionist Council have just declared at their annual meeting that political fusion between Northern and Southern Ireland is impossible. They are willing to co-operate where it is possible to do so in the interests of the whole country, but go under a Dublin Parliament they will not.

The present deplorable condition of affairs in the South and the dark outlook have largely strengthened the arguments against union, and Ulster loyalists contend that if they placed their destinies under the control of an all-Ireland Parliament, the present tranquil state of the six counties would speedily be turned into the chaos and disorder that prevails in the rest of Ireland.

EASTER

Is the First of April

LONDON, Feb. 23-On April 1, 1928, there will enter into force a revised agreement concluded between the Krupp Works and the Bolshevist Government. Negotiations between these two principals have had a somewhat checkered career. Immediately following the armistice, Krupps recognised the necessity of turning their attention primarily to the manufacture of the implements of peace, and naturally looked to Russia as an immense field Government Betains Rights

The Soviet Government is to receive 17.5 per cent of the entire harvest in winter seeds, and it retains the right to purchase the balance at the price

all Russian laws and the concessionnaires have, in addition, to pay all legal taxes and all customs dues, except for goods imported for use on their own works.

At the conclusion of the agreement,
the duration of which is not stated, the concessionnaires must hand over to the Government all the farms with looked to Russia as an immense field

They speedily discovered that it would be necessary, in the first instance, to create a demand for agricultural machinery, and also that pay-ment would have to be taken in kind For this reason they opened negotia-tions with Moscow for the acquisition of areas in the Don Cossack district, with the intention of introducing modern methods of cultivation and thereby providing an outlet for their products.

A Preliminary Treaty In June, 1922, a preliminary treaty was signed at Moscow, under which Krupps intended to invest 100,000,000 marks in the Russian enterprise. The speedy depreciation of the mark, however, rendered this sum hopelessly in-adequate, and although the Soviet Government insisted upon the execu-tion of the treaty, that course was

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

WASHINGTON, March 8-Abolition of the money-printing hand press and al of 355 plate-printers at the United States Bureau of Printing and Engraving has revived public interest in the controversy that recently raged in Congress over installation of the labor-saving power press. Charges were made that impression of the hand press by which United States With the obliteration of 246 hand-sorrow," they say, "the Germans of the surrow," they say the surrow, "they say the surrow, "they say the surrow, "they say the surrow, "they say they say the surrow, "they say the surrow, "they say they currency has been produced for 40 presses at the bureau, the plate-print-years would lower the quality of our ers maintain that Uncle Sam's procpaper money and put a premium on Subcommittees on appropriations in both the House and Senate were supplied with official indications that counterfeiting of money, bonds and Government checks has attained wholly unprecedented dimensions. In view of this state of affairs, representatives of the plate printers opposed the "false economy" which they insisted would make it easier than processes at the disposal the disposal the new attempt for domination over the German people, we, although in ment or expert lithographers. Testifying on this subject before the Senate subcommittee, Frank J. Coleman, editor of the official organ of the Plate-Printers Union, said:

The paper money situation is thistatt if anyone can make it in any cellar or small printing shop, your paper money is going to be as worthever for expert crooks to flood the country with counterfeit Government issues.

Spurious Rum Money

William H. Moran, chief of the Secret Service, told the House subcommittee that the Treasury undoubtedly is confronted with a serious counter-feiting problem. He described the danger spots as being mostly along the Atlantic seaboard and difficult to cope with because of the extensive use of fake currency in the bootleg-ging traffic. Mr. Moran added that counterfeiting of all kinds of Government values—currency, checks, bonds, postage, revenue stamps and permits was now so rife that his present force of 121 men was unable to grapple

The chief of the Secret Service made an appeal for 10 more operatives and an increase in his appropriation from $330,000 to $425,000. Martin B. Madden, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, asked if Mr. Moran couldn't "scratch along" on $415,000. The Chicago Congression that instead of putting a stop to counterfeiting "false economy," in the form of power presses, would be inquired into the form of power presses, would be a committed by the counterfeiting that the form of power presses, would be a committed by the counterfeiting that the form of power presses, would be a committed by the counterfeit of the coun man made his inquiry just after Mr. Moran had referred to the capture in Mr. Madden's own city of $200,000 in made no impression on Congress and clever counterfeit notes before one of the ancient and honorable hand press,

He added that the bigsecond counterfeiting case the Secret another increase of 200 per cent over another increase of 200 per cent over where two persons in prison awaiting sentence engraved and printed counterfeit $20 notes so skillfully that they would pass experts.

Bankers Protest

On behalf of the plate printers who objected to the installation of power presses, the following resolution, adopted by the American Bankers' Association in October, 1922, was sub-mitted to the Senate subcommittee:

If that is what the Government wants there is no use for us to say anything. The discharge of men is the smallest consideration.

Precautions Necessary

Mr. Coleman told the Senate subommittee of an issue of $10,000,000 in counterfeit money bearing the imprint of the Ozone Park National Bank of New York. He also described how the Treasury Department, in order to cope with an issue of counterfeit $100 bills had provided for a form which had to be filled out by everybody present-ing a $100 bill at a bank for change, stating name and address and how the bill was obtained. warns Germany that new Italy will not permit attacks to be made on Ital-ian citizens.

The decision of the British Government to accept the terms offered by the American Funding Commission for the settlement of the debt to the United States has not been received with enthusiasm in Italy. Indeed Italian statesmen and public opinion had always considered the question of the inter-allied debts as a unique problem which had to be settled by all the interested states at the same time. By reaching a separate agreement with the United States Government Great Britain has given a great blow to the Italian idea of the general cancellation of inter-allied war debts. The British policy is now made the object of attack from a large section of the Italian press. The hope that England would cancel its credits toward Italy and France has faded out as that cancellation was only pos-sible if it was preceded by a similar cancellation by the American Gov ernment toward England. This prob lem has again been the dominant question of the week, and most of the newspapers, after returning to the much-used proposition that France and Italy borrowed their money from the British and American governments, and devoted it to a common cause, go on to say that Great Britain has consented to pay its debts to America not because it was a matter of honesty on its part, but merely because it was good business for it.

The attention of Italian public opinion has been drawn to the proposed amendment of the United States Emigration Bill, whereby the number of emigrants to be admitted every year in the United States far from being increased, as it was generally believed, is to be reduced from 3 to 2 per cent. Strong pressure is made on the Italian Government to use all its influence to prevent the final approval of such a law, which (as it is pointed out here) is not only contrary to Italian, but far more to American interests. Indeed, it is believed to be extremely unfair and unjust at a time there is a great demand for when there is a great demand for skilled labor in America to prevent Italy, to meet such a demand.

This project has been presented to the intellectual commission of the League of Nations presided over by Henri Bergson, the eminent French philosopher. The idea has been the object of the most severe criticism. Many declare it to be a big mistake to favor art and literature. The best productions were literature. The best productions were never inspired in grand surroundings. Virgil, for example, while in poverty, wrote his masterpiece, the Bucolica, but when later, in the height of his fame he wrote in comfortable and companies surroundings, his works did. romantic surroundings, his works did not equal his first poems. But the real difficulty arises when the choice of the "best writers" comes to be made. For if all the best writers of the world had to be called together, the whole of Capri itself would not suffice to hold them all. It is not likely that the project will obtain favor among the writers themselves The commercial treaty which has lately been concluded between the inion of Canada and Italy has al-

Guitry-Messager Operetta Has First Production in Paris

Special Correspondence OR the first time Sacha Guitry has tried his hand at operetts. Ingenious strokes, an astonishingly facile dialogue, light poetry mingled mixed with emotion-all these qualplay like all Sacha Guitry's plays. It lent itself to music. Having chosen as his collaborator renovated the operetta. They have lyric feeling with the vitalizing exwafted a breeze full of grace, charm, and wit, over the triviality, the coarseness, of what is nowadays presented under the name of operetta.

M. Messager, who has lived in the closest intimacy with serious music, who has been for many years conductor at the opera, after having been conductor at the Opéra Comique, has, as a composer, never departed from the operetta. To listen to his works is a pleasure that never wanes. While so many ambitious lyrical dramas sleep in a bed of dust, Messager's works are still alive and spruce. "L'Amour Masqué" is no less agreeable than his preceding productions. From the very first bars we find again the happy vein to which we owe "La Basoche," "Véronique," "Les Petites Michu," etc. . . . It is Messager at his best. Music finds its place every-where, without effort. It enters the spoken dialogue, plays its rôle and re-tires almost unnoticed. Everything is said but nothing is insisted upon. The style is light, but neat and precise. It is written with facility and promptitude, but without negligence. The distinction. The orchestration is exstruments enwrap the melodies in the most tender atmosphere. The song of the Maharafah is an example of this captivating charm made of so little.

M. Guitry has written verse so simit is verse. His lines are so fresh in form and sentiment that they are in themselves a melody. They provided M. Messager with a text essentially "musicable." The subject is so thin that it escapes analysis. But it is told with such ease that it appears de-

This operetta was well served by a remarkable interpretation. The exquisite comédienne, Mme. Yvonne Printemps, revealed herself as a talented singer. Her voice is fresh, clear. supple, delightful. She sings with great simplicity, but with much intelligence, expression and emotion. She is truly an artist. M. Guitry was "Lui." He did not sing, but played his rôle with his usual talent. M. Darmant had great success as the Maharajah, and M. Maurel remains in the good traditions of the comic style in the operetta as the interpreter. The composer who, for the first two nights directed the orchestra, was loudly ap-

Bruno Walter Conducts Minneapolis Symphony

Bruno Walter conduct two symphony concerts. He is to be here for three more weeks, and presumably he will provide us with the same quality of musical nourishment with which he satisfied us last Friday and Sunday. Sunday afternoon the central number, on a supposedly popular program, was the first Brahms symphony, and it may be added that this was the first attempt to tempt the musical palate of our popular concert audiences with any of the four great symphonies by Brahms. Perhaps Mr. Walter was experimenting; whatever his object he succeeded beyond the most ardent expectations, for both audience and or-chestra players united in a demonstration such as we have never experi-enced since the Minneapolis Orchestra has been in existence.

He smoothed out the austerities of the first movement until all its parts articulated with a precision and definiteness that revealed both its intellectual and emotional qualities more fully than any other leader we have heard, unless we except Nikisch. He accomplishes his purposes with at least a semblance of reserve power: molds the orchestral choirs to his mood with superb reliance. The second and third movements glowed with a lyric beauty outweighing the unquestioned intellectuality that is the dominating characteristic of the whole work. It was a memorable performance, the greatest we have had of any symphony this season, perhaps of any season.

Mr. Walter had already established with humor, tenderness succeeding himself in the affections of a Minnewitty repartee, spontaneity, continuous invention in the details, irony last Friday, when he played the Schumanu B flat symphony; the Suite from mixed with emotion—all these qualities which form the very personal talent of M. Guitry are precisely the qualities required for the operetta. In an operetta the subject is not all-important. "L'Amour Masqué" is a play like all Sacha Guitry's plays. It play like all Sacha Guitry s plays: tives, it is impossible to think of this is of the same quality. The same gifts performance except in superlative are there displayed. But better than terms. In these latter days we are not supposed to anticipate a thrill from a Schumann symphony; it was André Messager, Sacha Guitry could given in this reading. Romance often becomes an excuse for sentimentalizwork born from this union is indeed delightful. The two authors have renovated the operetta. They have the operetta. Mr. Walter is one of the be anced men temperamentally that ever wielded a baton; there is economy of motion in his leadership and he pro-duces a maximum of effect. He was always the master of mood in each of the orchestral selections; and in the Wagner number there was a majestic tide of emotional feeling, a noble pathos and a fine welding together of the parts of the orchestra with full consciousness of every bit of dynamic power at his disposal. Not the least significant part of the program were some plano accompaniments he played for Maria Ivogun, soloist of the concert. Bruce Simonds of Yale University, as soloist for the Sunday concert, gave satisfaction with his rendering of the Franck "Symphonic Variations."

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 6 (Special Correspondence)-The St. Louis Symphony orchestra, under Rudolph Ganz, devoted its thirteenth pair of subscription concerts to a Wagner program, with Margarete Matzenauer as soloist. Matzenauer goes with Wagner. She is, doubtless, a magnificent Brünn-hilde. Her voice is of heroic proportions, aglow with a tremendous sweep of dramatic fervor. With helmet and spear she is doubtless, at least in her conception, the personification of Wagner's type of gross heroic goddess. Matzenauer was in excellent voice, and carried her audiences, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, with an impetuous rush to something like an ovation. Her first number was the Recitative and Aria "Gerechter Gott!" from "Rienzi." Her second number was Brünnhilde's Immolation Scene from the finale of "Götterdammerung." MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 6 The overture to "Rienzi," prelude to (Special Correspondence) — We have the first act of "Lohengrin," and introbeen especially fortunate over the duction to the third act of "Lohengrin" week-end in Minneapolis in having use—though the prelude will never cease to be a thing of undimmed beauty—but "Waldweben," from "Sieg-fried," and the "Trauersmarsch," from 'Götterdämmerung" are marked with obility and grandeur.

The popular concert of March introduced Charlotte Demuth-Williams, violinist, as soloist. She played the fourth concerto of Vieuxtemps. Mme. Williams is a fine artist, with splendid technique and a pure quality of tone, but for some reason she seemed in her playing on this occasion to be somewhat spiritless. The big thing on the program was the second movement from the symphony by Chausson. It was received by the audience with enthusiasm.

HE problems that modern art present come with cumulative force to those who, watching and waiting, wish only for a just and staple valuation. They seek, and rightly, for a deeper sense of the meaning and value of art; they are tolerant, too, since modern natural science has depleted in some degree their confidence in fixed facts, and in the twentieth century mood of relativity, they are left peering anxiously into that aural haze that hangs in the heavens for some sure sign to go by. Still in its teens, self-consciously youthful, rather gawky at times and ponderous, yet quickly flashing when so prompted, modern art presents the spectacle of a movement that has grown in the brief space of a quarter of a century from the cult of the few to the opera-tive creed of the many. A monotype is a record on white paper of a design in oil paint made upon a metal plate, the transfer being made by "hand-proofing." Only one impression can be made of each design, since all the color is taken up by the paper during the process of taking the proof. If it were not for the interesting qualities obtained in this process it would seem hardly worth while. An unusual opportunity is offered at the Schwartz Galleries to see how far the monotype can be carried. Marion Gray Traver has found such a medium to her taste that her performance is little short of virtuosity. Her plates are often large. virtuosity. about fudge?" "O, I'd like that!" said Betsy. The Funny Man put on an apron, with bright flowers all over it, which made Betsy laugh. He found a smaller apron with bright flowers on it, which Mrs. Murphy wore when she answered the door, and that is a funny way to speak, because the door never says anything; and this apron was so much too long for Betsy that it had to be tied round her neck, and that made them both laugh. He opened a drawer in the spotless table on which Mrs. Murphy made bread and cake and

"As Plain As Day"

"It's as plain as day," said the Funny Man. "All we have to do is put three cupfuls of sugar and two squares of chocolate and half a cupful of milk and two tablespoonfuls of molasses and one piece of butter just the size of an egg in a pan, and boil and stir, and remove, and add one teaspoonful of vanilla, and beat it till it begins to look fudgy, and pour in a buttered tin, and set in the ice chest until it is cool, and there you are. Nothing could be easier. Come on! Come on!"

Then Mrs. Murphy's kitchen became full of busy, bright-flowered aprons. It was a neat kitchen, in which everything that could shine, whether it was the stove or a pan or a big kitchen spoon, did shine; and there was a geranium blooming in the window, and you couldn't have found a speck of dust in the corners, if you looked with your magnifying glass. And, of course, there was a kitten which chased the end of Betsy's apron. apron. Betsy measured the sugar and the Funny Man cut the squares of chocolate, and they had quite a discussion to decide how much butter is just as big as an egg, because, as the Funny Man said, the cooking book didn't tell whether it meant a hen's The Funny Man's Amusing House egg or a robin's egg. Betsy said she Betsy took off her knitted cap and was sure it meant a hen's egg, and sweater, and Betsy junior's knitted cap the Funny Man took her word for and sweater, and sat Betsy junior it. They put all these things together comfortably on the sofa. No other stove, and Betsy stirred while the grown-up person that Betsy knew had Funny Man buttered the tins. "Neither do I," said the Funny Man. F WE pay a visit to the armory in by knitting a small piece as an exthe Tower of London, we shall periment. For instance, cast on 12 quite different from what it was at hardly fail to note the resemblance stitches and knit a few rows—not less first. By a cellar we generally mean than six-take an inch-tape; and supan underground room, not suitable for pose you find that your work measures six stitches to the inch, and your living in. Is it not queer how the meanings of a word can change, as jumper is to be 21 inches at the foot of the back or front, you will know you must cast on 126 stitches, or whattimes goes on, and come to indicate something which was not meant at all when it was first used?

Here is a quite easy pattern for a medium-sized jumper:

Materials: 1 pound of 4-ply Scotch fingering wool; 1 pair knitting needles being laid, that was the first thing to be put upon it. Very large and handder to bottom of jumper 21 inches; standing so high that they could be width at foot from seam to seam seen wherever you sat at table. All width at foot from seam to seam seen wherever you sat at table. All (namely, half the width round the hips) 21 inches; length of sleeve from days. There was one long table; the servants sat at one end, the family at the other, and the salt divided them To sit above it showed that you were Begin at foot of back. Cast on 106 a member of the family or a guest and, if you sat below it, then it was clear that you were one of the house-sleeves by casting on 36 at beginning.

sleeves by casting on 36 at beginning of next two rows, 178 stitches in all. Continue knitting until the work measures 15 inches in depth. In the food, do we not? Yet there are still the rows of the primitive races who next row knit 75 stitches, cast off 28, one or two of the primitive races who knit 75. Knit these 75 to form right-do not eat it, although everybody else such a piece of work, we must have hand shoulder and sleeve, leaving the in the world does; and people who other 75 untouched for the present learned to knit evenly and steadily; because, although good knitting is beautiful, nothing is uglier or more unsatisfactory than knitting badly the work knit together the last two the world—the Via Salaris, near Rome stitches but one in every second row, -was made, in the first instance until you have 66 on the needle; knit carrying salt from one part of Italy In the first place, then, we must decide on the material and the tension (the size of the stitch). If we are wise, we shall choose wool for our first jumper; and, if it can be the best quality of Scotch fingering, so much the better. It will last longer than some wools which may look smoother, when new, but lose shape and color when washed. We next choose our instruments. A pair of vulcanite pins are light and smooth, but bone ones, or steel or aluminum needles may be used. Now we take dles may be used. Now we take following measurements:

Tront of the jumper.

Continue knitting until the front mixed with the earth; "salt licks" part of each sleeve is the same depth such places are called. salt springs or lakes, or where it is

Width round hips; length of front; iength of back; length of sleeve under arm; length from neck down back of arm to foot of sleeve.

Now for the tension. Find out how many of your stitches go to an inch, CALTCELLAR" is a curious word, spoil if it is salted and, therefore when you come to think about lasts very much longer. So people it. Why should we call the came to regard salt as a symbol of little table vessels which contain the faithfulness. When the Tsar of Ruswere wanted and, therefore, a salt ple, who do not have written agreecellar simply meant a place in which ments about their bargains as we salt was kept, just what it means now, have, are always careful to treat a of course. So that, while saltcellar man fairly if he has given them a meal means today what it originally meant, in which salt is included. An Arab "cellar" has come to signify something always offers his guest salt as a sign as long as he is with him, because he has eaten of his salt. They have a saying: "There is salt between us," by which they mean that they must be true to one another because of the salt they have eaten. When concluding a bargain or undertaking some engagement, salt is often produced and solemnly eaten after which no further ratification is required. In Abys-

Realizing Sales Large

The general market was less responsive this morning to the bidding up of special groups, being unable to absorb, except at substantial concessions in quoted values, the large volume of realizing sales and the stock offered by professional short interests. Gains in the equipment group were speedily canceled, and General Asphalt, California Petroleum, American Locomotive, Baldwin, Bethlehem B, Stromberg Carburetor, Stewart Warner, and Wells Fargo Express dropped 1 to 2 points, under yesterday's final figures.

There were a few strong spots. Market Street Railway second preferred jumping 5 points and Maxwell Motors A, Mack Truck, United Railmotors B, Call money opened at 4% per cent. The Indian cotton crop has been placed at 4,345,000 bales by the India Department of Statistics. Last year's crop totaled 3,735,000 bales.

Reductions of from 30 per cent to 50 per cent in shoe and leather products and textiles, marked the second day of the Leipsig spring fair.

More than 75,000 cotton growers in Texas, Oklahoma, Arisona and Arkansas now market their product through cooperative organizations.

Although municipal financing in February of $72,705,000 represented a decline compared with $35,493,000 in February 1932, the total of $170,481,000 for the first two months this year made a new record for this period.

SECRETARY OF TREASURY SAYS PLENTY OF CREDIT

washington, March 8—Treasury officials declared today that there was plenty of credit available at the banks to finance the growing wave of prosperity, and it was announced officially that the Federal Reserve Board is not contemplating another increase in reserve discount rates in the immediate future.

Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, said to callers today that the banks are in a position to take care of the increasing business, and he looks for "good times" to continue for a long time, possibly several years

Still Room for Growth

While steel mills are working at normal, he observes that many other lines of industry have not reached capacity or their normal output, and there is still room for growth. The rise in cotton prices to above 30 cents a pound will soon be reflected in prices consumers have to pay for cloth, it was pointed out, and by the same token, the advance in cotton prices has spread greater prosperity in the south and should be reflected in better business in other lines.

Boston to 4½ per cent was made necessary, it was said, to keep pace with the rising money market in those centers and to harmonize the rates generally. While money rates are bound to mirror increased business, the money market today was declared to be "comfortable."

Attention was called by the Secretary to the reserve ratio of about 76 per cent during the 1919-1920 period of inflation, as evidence of plenty of buyers of South American Frigorifics, credit to finance better business.

Collections Excellent

The Treasury has been successful in bettering its anticipation on back tax collections. During the current fiscal year there has been collected in back taxes approximately $300,000,000. This came chiefly from unsettled claims of 1917. This figure had been set for the entire fiscal year, so that the collections between now and June which should approximate nearly $100,000,000, will be above the expected total, and should contribute toward reducing the anticipated deficit late. Treasury balance.

In addition, customs receipts have been surpassing the most optimistic hopes. The collections so far this fiscal year total $353,760,000, as compared with $214,590,000 for the corresponding period of last year. The estimate now is that customs receipts will exceed $500,000,000 for the cur-

The export of skins has been resumed, and the The recent advance in federal reskins has been resumed, and the serve discount rates at New York and United States is said to be a buyer.

Exports Increase During the last month exports of British hides and skins reached a total of 14,277 hundredweight, out of which America took hides and skins to the weight of 3275 hundredweight and Germany—in spite of the chaos of the mark—3383 hundredweight. BALTIMORE & OHIO'S SHOWING

The improvement in Baltimore & Ohio's gross earnings since 1917 is clearly evident in the higher level generally maintained by the upper heavy line on the chart above.

The frequency with which the lower heavy line, representing net operating income, has dropped below the zero line during the same period testifies to the tremendous increase in expenses.

The fall in the price of the stock since 1916 appears to have been in anticipation of the decreased dividends in 1918 and 1919 and the discontinguity of the decreased dividends in 1918 and 1919 and the discontinguity of the decreased dividends in 1918 and 1919 and the discontinguity of the decreased dividends in 1918 and 1919 and the discontinguity of the disc uing of payments during the following year. Both gross and net earnings have improved considerably during the last two months shown on the chart.

ENORMOUS SUMS FOR OIL LANDS IN OKLAHOMA

Million Dollars for Undeveloped Quarter Section Is Not Unusual

PONCA CITY, Okla., March 4-How much of a game of chance is it to pay $1,000,000 in cash for a quarter section of oil land that is as yet undrilled and undeveloped? The million is paid, too, for the mineral lease on the land only, the purchaser getting no other interest in the land itself, and in addition he must pay the Indian owner of oil taken from the tract.

It is admitted generally in oildom that such an "investment" is a gamble, that such an "investment" is a gamble, and many of the big oil concerns shake their heads and back away, but the total number on that acreage will be more nearly 1000 wells by the end of the average daily producfitable, and the results demonstrate profitable, and the results demonstrate that you can pay a million for one such lease and make good money, pro-vided you have the million to start

Naturally, development in the western Osage Indian country-for it is here that the big prices are paid—is a ple on earth per capita. In addition rich man's game, and only those indition they get one-sixth of all the oil found viduals and concerns that can arrange for a million any time they want it are participating. These million-dollar acreage tracts lie 20 miles east and northeast of Ponca City and a considerable portion of their development is directed out of this city.

How are these big-priced leases The Prairie Oil & Gas Company paid $800,000 for the southeast quarter of section 32, township 27, range 6 east in Decemmer, 1921, and thereby se the highest marw that had ever been paid in the Osage for an oil lease. U to Feb. 10, the Prairie had taken ou approximately 880,000 barrels of oil with a value of around $1,500,000 There are now nine producting well on the tract.

The Story of Others

The Gypsy Oil Company paid $1, 600,000 for the southeast quarter of section 24-27-5 east, and during the first three months of operation took out 350,000 barrels of crude. In the meantime the price of crude rang upward from $1.25 a barrel to $2.10

The Gypsy also paid $1,000,000 f the northwest quarter of section 2 27-5, and in the first four months to out approximately 305,000 barrels.

Skelly-Phillips paid $1,335,000 f the lease on the northwest quarter section 25-27-5 and took out arou 280,000 barrels in the first sev

The same people paid $1,585,000 the southwest quarter of 19-27-6 an in the first three months took ou about 180,000 barrels.

The Gypsy paid $1,005,000 for th uthwest quarter of the same section and got in the neighborhood of 500.00 barrels in the first three months.

When Colonel Walters, the Govern ment auctioneer wherever Osage o land leases are sold, put up tract 3 (the southeast of 32-27-6) in Decem ber, 1921, Louis Friedman of Munci Ind., spoke right up and, before any other bid could be made, declared: "I will give $600,000 for tract 34."

was the first time any such high bid had been made and other oil representatives present began to straighten up in their seats and "You could hear 'em gasp all around," said one of them afterward.

nan did not get tract 34, the Prairie paid $800,000 to get it, but Friedman has a number of other good tracts in that locality. Tract 34 is of land that it would be possible to find anywhere, hilly and stony and without much space where a plow could be entered into the ground for eny considerable furrow.

"It's a mighty good thing it's got oil under it," said an Osage farmer recently; "it sure isn't worth a penny Marland Discovers West Osage

It was Earnest W. Marland, the Ponca City oil magnate, and head of the Marland Oil company and several associate companies, who dis covered the western Osage or Bur-bank oil field as it is also called. He holds a blanket natural gas lease on something like 350,000 acres of the gas on the Bertha Hickman allotment.
three years ago, he encountered oil at 2900 feet and started the developat 2300 feet and started the development of one of the greatest fields in METROPOLITAN EDISON COMPANY oil history. Up to the end of Novem ber, 1922, there had been 26,700,00 barrels of oil taken from the wester. Osage field, and since that date th daily average has been approximatel 83,000 barrels; up to Feb. 10 th total taken out would approximat 32,676,000 barrels, of a total value of more than $50,000,000. Credit is also given to Marland, in addition to opening this field, for be ing personally responsible for turning into the Osage Indian treasury more than $12,000,000. Marland played hunch on geology and won. He ha opened every northern Oklahoma field with the exception of the old Mervine and always on geology. He still holds the blanket gas lease on the western Osage and is gradually drilling additional wells as the gas may be

Way Back in 1916

The Gypsy Oil company, which has always been a consistent developing agency in the Mid-Continent field, opened the eyes of oildom back in 1916 when it paid $2,139,000 for the ease on the Boston farm of 640 acres in the eastern Osage, but the tract at that time had 47 producing wells and was making 163,177 barrels of oil

The sale of Osage Indian oil leases at public anction by the government began on Nov. 11, 1912, and the last one was held on Jan. 18, 1923. In such a manner there have been leases on 628,316 acres sold for a total of $68,715,976, or an average per acre of $109.37. The greatest sale was on June 28 last, when 34,660 acres brought $10.887,950.

Following the sale of million-dollar acreage tracts, there is always an mmediate development of the land started. On Jan. 18, 1923, when the last sale was held, Skelly-Phillips paid $1,101,000 for the southeast quarter of 23-27-5 and by Feb. 1 they had 12 rigs building for immediate tests; these same people paid $1,245,000 for the northeast quarter of section 24, and they are building 10 rigs thereon.

Drilling Begins at Once

For the northwest quarter of section 24, the Gypsy paid $1,300,000 and is building 11 rigs, and $1,100,000 for the northwest quarter of 19, where 10 rigs have been built and four of the tests have been spudded in. The Sinclair company has built eight rigs on the south, west of section 20, for which the company paid $465,000, and six rigs in northeast 19 which brought $615,000 at the recent January sale.

Under the terms of government leases on Osage Indian lands, at least one well must be drilled on each quarthe land a one-sixth royalty of all the ter section within a year after the pur oil taken from the tract. Two hundred and fourteen quarters were sold at the January sale tion of the western Osage at the present time is around 84,000 barrels. All the money received from the sale of Osage Indian land leases goes into the United States Treasury for the In-dians themselves, as has often been explained, making them the richest peoon their lands, and as this oil is sold the money also goes into the Treasury for them

HE completion of forty-one years' service with the Canadian Pacific Railway ranks Frank W. Peters, general superintendent of the British Columbia division with headquarters in Vancouver, as the oldest official, with one exception, in the employ of Canada's premier transcontinental system. He entered the service of the company in 1881 in Winnipeg, after spending one year in the employ of the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway and seven years with the Intercolonial Railway in New Brunswick, his Recent changes have made Mr. Peters the chief executive officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia. He devotes much attention to the development of the company's transpacific business, and the addition of two large passenger liners on the Orient and Australian runs has added greatly to the company's prestige on the Pacific. Since his arrival in Van-couver, the Canadian Pacific has erected new and modern wharves in Vancouver, Victoria, and Seattle. He is a resident of Vancouver, B. C., and a native of St. John, New Brunswick. He entered railroading as telegraph operator at the age of 13. After joining the Canadian Pacific Railway he was successively freight and land agent, general freight agent, assistant freight traffic manager of west ern lines, assistant to the vice-president of western lines, and general superintendent. He is well known among railway men all over the continent.

Mr. Peters has long been a strong advocate of the shipment of grain via the Pacific and the Panama Canal to the United Kingdom and across the Pacific to the Orient. He was largely instrumental in having a trial shipment of wheat sent on a Canadian Pacific ship to Great Britain during the early days of the World War to prove the feasibility of bulk grain through the tropics. The venture was entirely successful. In 1921, 7,000,000 bushels were shipped out of Vancouver.

Mr. Peters is a former president of the Vancouver Canadian Club, present president of the Shaughnessy Golf Club, and former president of the Vancouver Club, the leading social club in western Canada.

Demand for Goods From India and China Improves-Part Time Work Ends

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 20 (Special Correspondence)—The promise of a rendicate, has, to a certain extent, been fulfilled in the first month of 1923. After a long period of stagnation there has been quite a respectable interest in cloth as a result of increased demand from Calcutta.

India is the biggest market in the cutta the largest single outlet so that when buyers there passed from inactivity an immediate difference was noticeable in the trade. Good area of the present financing should be followed by a total of the present financing should be followed by a total of the public through the when buyers there passed from inactivity an immediate difference was noticeable in the trade. Good crops in successive seasons and an increase in the exchange value of the Indian rupee, coupled with the prospect of further increases in cotton prices are regarded as the main causes of the movement mentioned, but so far as movement mentioned, but so far as can be detected there have not been CHICAGO LIVE-STOCK sympathetic movements in other parts as follows:

Organized short time in the cotton mills of Lancashire has now come to an end, though this does not mean that short time has been completely abandoned and that unemployment is decreasing very rapidly. Upon a vote of the trade being taken, the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners' Association, which recommended a continuance of the Friday to Tuesday stoppage, failed to get the necessary support for its recommendation.

Yarn Shortage Possible

Many of the members are reported to hold the view that a further depreciation of stocks by such a large amount weekly would produce a dangerous shortage of yarn for the looms and would lead to a swift rise of prices on the resumption of demand, a rise which, not being to the interests of customers, would not in the end, be to their own interests either.

To support their contentions it is stated that the stocks of yarn have been induced to three weeks' supply in a matter of 100 or so mills, which have been induced to turnish figures of their stocks to the provisional emergency committee.

SENATORS WIN FIRST CONTEST

Canadiens Lose in Playoff Game for N. H. L. Title-Second Game Tomorrow

MONTREAL, March 8 (Special)—
The second game of the playoff series now being contested for the championship of the National Hockey League between the Canadiens and Ottawa Senators will be played in Ottawa tomorrow night, and the latter enters the game with an advantage form the game with an advantage from last night's encounter, when the Sena-tors defeated the locals, 2 to 0, in a poorly played contest.

The game was the poorest exhibition of the season, although at times brilliant hockey was produced. There was no scoring during the first period although both teams had good chances. On some of these Benedict chances. On some of these Benedict and Vezina made great saves while others were useless owing to players failing to take passes or shooting wild when close in. Toward the end both teams showed an inclination to shoot from a distance rather than take chances on breaking through the de-fenses which were both stepping into the puck carriers.

Play in the second period was faster at the start and both goals had nar-row escapes but loose play gradually became the rule and penalties were numerous. Playing six men against four, Ottawa scored the first goal when G. Boucher rushed and passed to Dennenay. For the remainder of the period Ottawa had the better of the play, but missed several easy chances to increase its total.

Ottawa played a strong defensive game in the final period, when it played six men to five for 11 minutes and the locals tried individual attacks which were easy to break up. Vezina and Benedict made several good stops when attackers broke through occasional rushes. Darragh broke away and scored the final goal on an individual rush and shot from a sharp angle. IRELAND TO PLAY FOR DAVIS CUP

the Entry

NEW YORK, March 8-Followers of lawn tennis in the United States are today wondering just what players will make up the Irish team which is to compete in the Davis Cup cham-pionship tournament of 1923. The united States Lawn Tennis Associa-tion received a formal challenge from that country yesterday, it being the first time Ireland has entered.

No information has yet been received as to the possible personnel of the team, but it is understood there are a number of promising young players available. Because of the fact that preliminary Davis Cup rounds probably will be played in June, it will be necessary to select the team in advance of the Irish national champion-ships, scheduled June 16 to 21.

land's entry as it marks the first time Isles have been represented by more than one team and establishes the Irish Free State on the same competitive footing as the other British dominions, including Canada, India Australia and South Africa. British Lawn Tennis Association already has filed its 1923 challenge. The communication from the Irish association states that "in consequence of the establishment of Ire-

Harvard 19, Yale 4.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 8-For the fifth successive year and the nineteenth time in 23 years, Harvard University is again the winner of its championship hockey series with Yale. the Crimson having won the third and final game at the New Haven Rink last night, by a score of 2 to 1. Not only did this victory give Harvard its series with Yale, but it also gave the Crimson the championship of the "Big Three," a title which it has held for several years.

This year's series with Yale was the hardest fought that the two teams have ever held. The first game was played here, and Harvard won by a score of 3 to 2, after 11 minutes 35 seconds of overtime playing. Capt. George Owen Jr. '23 scoring the winning goal for the Crimson. The second game was played at Boston last Saturday, and Yale won a listless game, 3 to 0, in regulation time.

Last night, the third game was much like the first with Captain Owen again scoring the winning goal for his team after 12 minutes 45 seconds of overtime. While the close score would indicate little to choose between the two teams, Harvard appeared to be quite a bit stronger than the Elis, both as to team work and individual playing. Captain Owen played practically the entire game at center, it being the first time he had been started in the forward line, and the Crimson leader not only played a brilliant individual game but he teamed up splendidly with the other forwards. He was given fine assistance by W. E. Crosby 24, in the outer defense and E. M. Beals '23, C. G. Walker '24 in the forward line. Chandler Bigelow '25

For Yale, Capt. J. O. Bulkley '23 and G. A. Jenkins '25 played splen-didly. The former was very fast and often carried the puck down to Har-vard's outer defense, while Jenkins made many brilliant stops, and it was largely his work that kept the Crimson score down and carried the game into overtime. Athletes Training by Correspondence

Loudon, March 5

A CORRESPONDENCE course to train English athieles for the Olympic Games at Paris is the newest word in British sport. The scheme originated with Lord Biddell's widely circulated News of the World. Alse Nelson, who has instructed Cambridge and army athletes for many years, is conducting the mail courses. After the preliminary stages selected men will be invited to speak a period of intansive training at the Royal Air Force Stadium, now under construction at Stadium, now under construction at Uxbridge, a few miles from London.

Another Record

Defeats William Ritola Over 5000-Meter Distance

NEW YORK, March 8—One of the most amazing races in the history of track and field athletics was run last night by J. W. Ray of the Illinois Athletic Club, Chicago, in defeating his most prominent rival, William Ritola of the New York Finnish-American Athletic Club, over the 5000-meter course at the Western Union Athletic Association games. Athletic Association games.

Ray set a new world's record of 14m. 54s.- for the distance, breaking both the official mark of 15m. 5 4-5s. set in 1912 by G. V. Bonhag, and the time set by Ritola two weeks ago at 15m. 11-5s., which is not yet official, as the Amateur Athletic Union has not had opportunity to pass upon it.

Besides running a brilliant race that left a gap of nearly 30 yards between himself and Ritola when he broke the tape, Ray performed an astounding stunt. After running nearly three miles at a steaming pace he did the last 220 yards in the startling time of 24 2-5s. Ritola also broke his own record in following Ray to the finish.

Following his strategy of forcing Ritola to set the pace, Ray dropped into second place when the Finn shoved away from the pack at the start of the second eighth-mile and kept within a stride of the leader until the last eighth when he shot out and left Ritola appearing to be standing still.

The fast pace showed its effects on Ritola when he turned the 2½-mile mark, but Ray seemed to be as fresh as when he started. It was a reversal of the three-mile race in which Ritola beat Ray last week when he permitted the latter to hold the lead until within 10 yards of the tape, when he burst out into a great sprint and beat the Chicagoan to the finish. Walter Higgins of Columbia Univer-ity won the "Bishop Mile," defeating J. J. Connelly of Georgetown University, who was fourth. The time was 4m. 3is. Connelly, indoor intercollegiate mile champion, lost the race in the last lap. Walter Mauns, Buffalo's star schoolboy runner, finished second,

LOSES TO KIRKWOOD ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 8—Highest honors in the Florida east coast open golf tournament went to J. H. Kirkwood of Australia yesterday when he defeated W. C. Hagen, British open champion, by a lead of three stokes. The Australian took three strokes. The Australian took 283 strokes for his perfect 72 holes, Hagen, by skillful playing, cut down the 7-stroke lead of Kirkwood at the beginning of the final round to 3.

J. M. Barnes, of Pelham Manor, New York former one champion, finished York, former open champion, finished third with a score of 293, and Leo Diegel of Friendship Club, Washing-ton, fourth with a 297.

P. N. Collins, in the first of the afternoon contests, continued to play his usual careful style of open table caroms, with an occasional resort to a masse shot when in difficulty. His opponent was also E. A. Renner, and defeated the Youngstown, O., contestant by a score of 300 to 161 in 18 innings.

Collins' best work was done in his final inning, when he made a run of 76, unfinished, by a mixture of open play and nursing that was fully up to the standard he has maintained the standard he has maintained throughout the tourney. He led off well at the start, making a run of 41 in his third turn, mostly by open table play, continuing to play good, sound billiards, without unusual features, for the balance of the game. Renner also played fairly well, but his care-lessness resulted in several misses. The score by innings:

ASSAULT-AT-ARMS HELD IN LONDON

Many of World's Finest Fencers, Amateurs and Professionals, Gather Together

LONDON, Eng., Feb. 23 (Special Correspondence)—In an atmosphere redolent with the old-time romance and courtesy of swordsmanship, many of the world's finest fencers, amateur and professional, gathered together in the Grand Banqueting Hall of the Hotel Cecil, London, recently, for an assault-at-arms, in aid of the benevo-lent fund of the British Legion (Field Marshal Earl Haig's appeal for ex-service men of all ranks) and of the British League of Help for the Devastated Areas of France. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, ever to the fore where charity or sport is concerned, headed the list of patrons, but, to the disappointment of a nu-merous and distinguished company, he was unable to put in an appearance.

ILLINOIS HAS A BRIGHT OUTLOOK

Fifty Varsity Baseball Candidates Are Working Out Under Coach Carl Lundgren

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., March 2 (Special Correspondence)—Baseball practice at the University of Illinois, preparatory to the annual spring training trip into the sunny south from March 29 until April 7 has attracted 50 candidates for the varsity nine and 90 freshman for he first year squad.

Illinois has won the Intercollegiate Conference championship on the diamond for the past two seasons and the outlook at the present time is exceedingly bright, with all but a few from last year back playing good ball in the early practice sessions.

Coach Carl Lundgren, at one time HARD AT WORK star pitcher for the Chicago Cubs, and later coach of the University of Michistar pitcher for the Chicago Cubs, and gan championship teams, has always had a fine pitching staff to work with. This season's prospects are no excep-tion, for there are 22 candidates for the box positions on the Orange and Blue baseball team. The stars from last year are E. H. Banker '23, W. E. Roettger '24, C. L. Jackson '23, and L. E. Mohr '23, but the pitching find of the season here seems to be in W. C. Crawford '25, who is a big fellow with plenty of control, curves and > Practice to date has been in the giant armory here beneath the nets and cages, and it has been limited to pitching, batting and fielding grounders. The remainder of the candidates for the hox positions are A. H. Bueche R. H. Blakely '25, F. A. Gabrielson '23, E. T. Erickson '25, L. H. Janowitz '23, E. C. Kuehl '24, F. E. O'Conner '24, H. Kirwan '25, Willis Baur '25, Rodney Schweger '25, E. C. Tukey '23, W. P. Wierman '24, F. L. Pfeiffer '23, H. L. Hon '24 and W. R. Spurlock '24.

> The Illini team is always hard-hitting and fast on the bases, Coach Lundgren having no room for a slow player. Because of the snappy playing of his players they have always con through their games with the longest end of the score.

The chief hitters and best players from last season's nine are F. C. Dougherty '23, catcher, who led the Conference in hitting; Capt. Paul Stewart '23, probably the best shortstop or third baseman in the "Big Ten"; O. H. Vogel '23, outfielder, who is known to the west as the second ond base, and C. B. Bissell '23, out-

Around the bases the Illinois team will be strong. J. C. Happenny '25 of Revere, Mass., is the best candidate for first base, but he will have to compete for this job against P. J. Foley '24, F. F. Cother '25, C. W. Garner '25, W. S. Griffith '23 and Paul Woodson '24. With Hellstrom on second and Captain Stewart at short, P. S. Durant '23, substitute last season, will probably play third. F. G. Horton '23 will make a strong bid for an infield position this season, having been on the second squad for the last two seasons. R. L. Summerfield '25, P. C. Schroeder '25, and J. M. Hull '24 are out for second base, while the best prospects for third base are Durant, J. Tomasek '25, J. Peele '23, '25. L. B. Schlapprizzi '25 and J. J. Winkler '24 have been showing some fast fielding at shortston. Besides Vogel and Bissell in the

Vocational Guidance That Guides

This is the first of two articles on vocational guidance. The second will appear in an early issue.

By DR. ELMER E. JONES Director of School of Education, Northwestern University

HERE is probably no single expression in educational par-lance that has been used more A lance that has been used more frequently in recent years than "Vocational Guidance." This idea came into existence as a protest against the narrow traditionalism of American schools, particularly the high schools. Compulsory educational laws compel students to go to school, but to what purpose? Critics of the schools an-swered, "Simply to learn a lot of traditional stuff which has little relation to practical needs in actual world affairs." History, yes; but the history of ancients so far removed from modern life that the student sees no relationship. Science, yes; but what? Textbook study. Experiments in physics and chemistry and biology, with no relationship to living conditions or needs. English, yes; plenty of it; but consisting of the dry bones of grammar, flat compositions, biography of a few men of letters, but nothing about the living, breathing English of daily usage. The whole program was summed up by the critics as impractical, useless, worse than a waste of time.

When the Reformer Came Forth Then came "vocational guidance." Some reformer coined the term who wanted to be extremely practical—who wanted to throw out the whole traditional system—methods, subject matter, everything, and substitute for it "training for real living." The reformer would almost make a vocation compulsory; for why should there be people in a democracy who have no vocation? Let us clear society of tramps and idlers! "Give every youth the necessary training he must have to do this particular job," and democracy is saved. This program was even advocated by such radicals as the specific objective in all education, from the elementary school through the university. This general doctrine of vocational guidance was argued also from the standpoint of social needs. Society needs large numbers of artisans and craftsmen, yet our schools do not teach these arts and crafts. A youth cannot learn even the elements of any craft or business in the traditional school, because the school has never deemed such training to be its a Royal Foundation; there is ample specific needs for people in all such activities, why not incorporate such training in the regular course of study? If society has such definite needs and these needs can be met by training given in the schools, certainly it is well within the function of the school to give it. These were some of the arguments presented for the in-troduction of "vocational guidance" into the schools. It arose as a pro-test against tradition, just as many of reforms in education have arisen When Repulsive considered is repulsive to the real educator, who sees the youth as a growing developing individual with possibilities far above and beyond the mere learning of a simple trade or in Westminster parlance as "Upbusiness. It becomes particularly ab-horrent when it appears as a quick before modern methods and requiremethod of getting youth into money ments demanded expansion, the making. Under such conditions it schoolboys did their daily work, sitgives a superficial habit formation which encourages the youth to leave schools and engage with some degre of success in simple occupations, but does not take care of his future de velopment and growth. In fact it greatly narrows his development, be cause these early habits intrench him into fields of work from which he is not able to withdraw. Having no higher objective in life, and being skilled in the particular thing he is doing, he sticks. And this is precisely what the exploiter of youth

In a democracy such as we are try ing to train youth to perpetuate, such a system is fatal. It takes the youth with possibilities and forever limits him. It trains boys and girls to be lit-tle, insignificant, mere tools in the hands of human exploiters, and gives to the race an iron-clad caste system which is destructive to every demo-cratic idea. Such a system might be tolerated with better grace if it were placed upon us by some autocratic force from above, but no! The system of education which we ourselves have organized and administered does it.

Other Unsavory Connections The term "vocational guidance" has developed other unsavory associations. No sooner did the practical educator devise this system for the schools than the vocational guidance expert came into existence. He came forth with brazen front, advertising his prophetic acumen, and for a fee he pretends to tell what they can best do in life by a' few casual glances at their physiognomy and by a superficial interpretation of a single page of notes. He is a quack of the first rank, and a menace to society. It has been estimated that over $1,000,000 were expended last year in Chicago alone for the services of such quacks. Not only the original expenditure was wasted, but much harm was done by guiding youth and men and women into fields of work for which they were not fitted. Many placement and adjustment bureaux are thriving upon such false assump-

But there is still another even more serious objection to such a superficial program for vocational guidance. Youth do not know what their life work shall be, parents do not know, teachers do not know, no one knows. It is claimed by psychologists and social workers, educators and teachers, and other experts who appear to be in a position to know, that human personality is such a complex, particu-larly while it is growing and developing, that it is incapable of analysis. Only the most superficial understanding of the future achievements of youth are possible with our present knowledge. Therefore, such training of youth is based upon a false diagnosis, an incomplete analysis, and leads

Little Dean's Yard, Westminster School, Showing the Old Archway

Westminster, One of the "Big Four," Famous for "Tossing of Pancake"

Special Correspondence 7ISITORS to Westminster Abbey seldom realize as they walk along the solemn aisles of the Abbey or stroll through the cool, shady cloisters on the southern side, that they are within a stone's throw of one of the "Big Four" among England's public schools. Westminster School, like Eton, Harrow and Winchester, is evidence that an Abbey school was in existence on the present site as far back as the fourteenth century, though the foundation of today is due to Queen Elizabeth and dates from uated as it is in Little Dean's Yard within a few paces of the west front of the Abbey, and lying in the very shadow cast by the Victoria Tower of the Houses of Parliament, could fail to gather traditions and fame with the passage of centuries.

The school buildings occupy the four sides of Little Dean's Yard, which is approached through the dark In many of its forms as they have cloister from the southern door of appeared in the curricula of the public schools, "vocational guidance" as thus from the Cloister into the sunlight of the yard, he sees on his left the won-

> Horsehair and Putty The upper school was in those days cut off from the lower by a curtain suspended from a rod crossing from side to side of the hall, about 30 feet from the ground. It is this rod which figures in the ancient custom for which the school is so famous, the "Tossing of the Pancake" on Shrove Tuesday, or, as the Westminster would describe it, the "Pancake Greeze." The school cook stands be-neath the bar, holding a frying pan which contains a "pancake" largely composed of horsehair and putty, while just in front of him a line of eager competitors, consisting of representatives from each form in the school, stand waiting like greyhounds in the slips.

At a signal from the headmaster, the ook hurls the pancake high over the bar. As it reaches the ground the 20 competitors fall upon it, a mass of writhing, panting, kicking despera-does, and for two minutes pandemonium reigns, while the remainder of the school surges round laughing and yelling encouragement, and the press photographers fill the atmosphere with the stench of their burning magnesium. At length the headmaster calls "Time!" and the scrum reluc-tantly breaks up. The fortunate much to the municipality in which to the municipality in which it is located, and its present experi-youth who has succeeded in securing the largest portion of the pancake, is presented, on the spot, to the dean of

for his valor the traditional guinea.

But modern needs have deprived the great schoolroom of its old character-prayers are read every evening, this custom being a survival of the excep-tional privilege granted to the school in the reign of Elizabeth, when by the Act of Uniformity it was ordained that all religious services should henceforth be conducted in English. Beyond the old archway is "College," the home of the "King's Scholars," a select band of 40 residents, who have obtained scholarships provided by the foundation. Among themselves it is considered that the King's Scholars form the nucleus and are the mainstay of the school. The King's Scholars wear academic caps and gowns while on the school premises; outside they wear the ordinary uniform-a top hat and tail coat.

Dignified Surroundings

Occupying the other sides of the yard are the four houses of the school, Grant's, Rigaud's, Home Boarders and Ashburnham, the last two sheltering the day boys who, as can be expected in a school situated in the very heart of London, greatly outnumber the boarders. In the Ashburnham House is the Scott Library, one of the finest of public school libraries in England. Besides preserving her great classical reputation, Westminster has developed a modern side of equal repute for the Rugby game. The school has basked for genera-tions in the shadow of the home of British legislation. For centuries the ancient room adjoining the Jerusalem Chamber, where the monks of the Abbey used long ago to take their frugal meals, has served as dining hall and, as a result of a long and harmonious connection with the Abbey, the boys have the unique privilege of using Poets' Corner as a chapel. By immemorial custom the Westminster boys lead the cry of 'Long live the King" at every coronation. Her position in the very heart of the Empire's capital has endowed her with a love of liberty and fervor for democratic ideals, which have led her to play no small part in the poli-tics and progress of the past and present centuries. In appreciation of the fact that the old-time narrow conception of a university's duty no longer suffices, Mc-Gill has just inaugurated a lecture course that is primarily for the residents of Montreal and suburbs. Although it is not a publicly supported institution, in the sense that the State universities of the United States are supported, McGill feels that it owes of that debt. So it is bringing to Montreal some of the continent's leading Westminster and receives as reward experts on city and social service problems. Thus it hopes to take itself to the thousands who cannot go to it; thus it aspires to do its share in istics, and it now serves the purpose promoting the welfare of the comof an assembly hall, where Latin munity.

public school system. That this new conception is finding increasing favor is indicated probably best of all by the announcement that eight states now have laws which provide that kindergartens must be established by cities and towns when parents petition for them. In a number of other states similar mandatory legislation will undoubtedly be enacted by spring. All except four of the 48 states have some laws on the subject, but in several cases no great good is done because value of the kindergarten comes from New York City, Louisville, Ky., and New Bedford, Mass. In each of these cities a careful study has made it plain that those children who have had kindergarten training have a much better chance than their less fortunate fellows of making normal progress through the grades. Louisville carried out its experiment with 3064 pupils who entered the first grade previous schooling and with 1497 who had attended kindergarten. It was found that the percentage of failure of kindergarten children was in all schools much less than that of non-kindergarten children. The proof, was conclusive, it is declared by Julia Wade Abbot in School Life, that "the broader the experience gotten early in life the more certain is the child to remain interested and active in his he will be in the inauguration of problems of his own. Spaulding, director of the Yale School of Education, who is authority for the were retarded one year or more only 17.6 per cent had started in the kindergarten. As a result of his inves-tigations, Dr. Spaulding recommends that the kindergarten age be lowered to 41/2 or 4 years, and that a systematic campaign be undertaken to enroll all'children in the city.

While the movement has perhaps gained its greatest momentum in the United States, signs are not wanting that the new professional conscious ness is not confined to the teacher of any one nation. In Canada, as well as in the mother country itself, teachers are taking their work more seriously and demanding that the public take it more seriously. this argument. In order to prove that vocational guidance in our schools has been a success, it would be necessary to study carefully all youth that have been guided into some walk of life, and determine by scientific measurement or natural endowment. Instead of such a system being an aid to youth in finding the activity in life in which success will be assured, it rather augments the possibilities of failure.

There is apparently much truth in the success argument. In order to prove that to prove that it would be necessary to study carefully all youth that have been guided into some walk of life, and determine by scientific measurement or natural endowment. What usually goes by the generic term of "deportment" has a more specific meaning under a new arrangement put into effect in the Morris High School of New York City. Hereafter pupils are to be rated in school citizenship. Co-operation, honesty, courtesy, willingness to serve and respect for school property are some of the things which will be considered in giving the pupil his mark. The plan, it is hoped, will encourage the boys and girls to be more careful of the impressions which they make on others older than themselves, will help to train them for a larger usefulness in the real citizenship soon to come and serve to make them take more frequent personal inventories.

Conrad's pictures are more mem rable than the events or even the characters themselves in many of these sea stories. They should be read in their entirety, for they are woven into the fabric of the plot.

Boisterous winds and sweeping gales, clear weather, shrouding fog and stiffing heat, sunset, moonrise, and the blinding glare of noon fill the pages of Conrad with the vivid pic-torial illusion of great marine paintings. Character in Epic

The action which springs out of character, and reflects character, alone satisfies the higher dramatic conditions. Here there is a marked difference between epic and dramatic poetry. The epic poem relates a great and complete action which attaches whether he may not still by night go itself to the fortunes of a people, or to the destiny of mankind, and sums up the life of a period. Emotion Recollected" Wordsworth seems rarely to have written under the immediate inspira-tion of a natural object. He sees a flower and is impressed by its unpretentious modesty; he leaves the spot and his long-continued meditation carries him far beyond the emotion experienced in the presence of the flower. There is, in fact, in the poem finally written surprisingly little of the original sensation. During the poet's meditation he has been drawn away from the spell of nature to the influence of the wisdom of the past as it is represented in the civilisation about him. His "emotion recollected in tranquillity" has been transmuted into something far finer than a sense-impression received from a natural object: it is his meditation during which he is in communion with the best that has been known and thought in the world, and not his sensitiveness to nature's beauty that has enabled him to write a poem of real and per-manent significance. In the case of most other romantic poets the enriching step of meditation is omitted efftirely or is merely casual; from this difference springs Wordsworth's suas far as Wordsworth is concerned, at least, the "spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings" does not mean comof the inspiring object, but presup-poses an interval of meditation during which the "emotion (is) recol-lected in tranquillity."—Barry Cerf, in "Modern Language Notes."

Editorials

At A meeting of Bostonians interested in the League of Nations, the other day, the story was told that Edison,

To Avert War's Menace being asked if it were possible that with modern aircraft and the perfection of deadly gas bombs London could be destroyed in twenty-four hours, responded curtly, "No, in four." A certain pertinency is given to the anecdote by the report from London that the British fire prevention committee has made formal recommendation that

London buildings, including dwellings, public houses, and shelters, should be equipped to protect the inhabitants against future aerial warfare. The committee urges that gas masks be distributed now to every house and place of assemblage, and that, furthermore, the public authorities construct shelters designed to protect citizens whose own houses are not provided with any protective devices. While the civilians are thus engaged in devising plans for their own protection, military chemists of every nation are busily at work inventing new and more terrible varieties of poisonous gas, while the manufacturers of aircraft, particularly in Europe, are centering their efforts upon the production of bomb-carrying machines.

It is an extraordinary evidence of the fatuity of the political mind that, in the face of such feverish preparation for the destruction of civil populations, and in the presence of grave apprehension on the part of those who know that the next war will not be confined in its terrors to the enrolled armies, that endeavors to avert war through intelligent international agreement should awaken any opposition whatsoever.

War can be thus averted. It is possible for an intelligent agreement among nations to prevent the growth of quarrels to the point at which they can be only ended by armed combat. In comparison to the dangers to be apprehended from another great war, the objections to an association or league of nations, pledged to peace, are but trifling quibbles. If every citizen, who for this or that political or intellectual doubt, arrays himself against the creation of such a league for the maintenance of peace would stop to consider what is involved in the alternative of war, he would surely rather take his chances with the association.

Beyond doubt, the publicity resulting from President Harding's advocacy of the World Court which will now be given this issue, vital to the permanence of civilization and to the happiness of millions who now live under civilized conditions, will prove stimulating to thought. It is a fortunate thing that at this juncture, through the President's act, the question of the United States participating in an international organization, which shall at least serve partly for the maintenance of peace, is to be made an immediate national issue.

From time to time, with quixotic enthusiasm, some statesman, braver or more intrepid than his fellows, Cornering Fuel Oils turns his lance against the gigantic structure set up by intrenched monopoly. The declaration of war against commercial and industrial oppression is inciting and inspiring, always, but never more so than in the fervid arraignment presented in the closing days of the last Congress by Senator La Follette, spokesman for the subcommittee of the Senate Manufactures Committee, which has devoted nine months to an investigation of the fuel oil industry in the United States. And yet a somewhat careful perusal of the published portions of that report fails to reveal anything particularly new. It is shown, of course, that the alleged monopoly maintained by the Standard Oil Company and its subsidiaries is becoming more and more complete, and that its profits, always great, are becoming greater. But these things are not particularly enlightening or illuminating. The statistics gathered and compiled by the sub-committee simply reestablish a known premise. It has never been generally believed that the dissolution order directed against the Standard Oil Company actually brought about a dissolution.

Senator La Follette, while proposing tentative remedies for a condition which he affirmatively establishes. actually does little more than to emphasize the claim that the present governmental machinery, both legislative and administrative, is too cumbersome, too unwieldy, or too illy constructed to deal effectively with the problem presented. Thus is again presented the necessity of choosing between two opposing policies. The demand, popularly, if it may be correctly judged from outward manifestations, is for the destruction of all forms of monopoly. The more conservative tendency of legislators, courts and administrators has been to promote and protect capitalistic enterprise in the development of commerce and trade, in conformity with the assumption that there are many beneficent trusts, and but few destructive monopolies.

There are two sides to the question, as is usual with all problems which present themselves. Admitting the offenses, intentional and circumstantial, which the Standard Oil Company has committed, they are to be condemned and punished, it would appear, only because of their magnitude. And yet it is doubtful whether the tribute exacted by the oil monopoly, assuming its existence, has borne more heavily on the contributing public than the exactions of the coal trust, the building materials trust, and the scores of other lesser trusts which have become predatory and grasping under the protection which society has thrown around them.

There is need of an awakening. Of this there is no doubt. An industrious and ordinarily thrifty people have long been penalized through their indifference and careless generosity. They are paying an excessive premium on oil, on coal, on housing, on clothing, on some forms of so-called skilled labor, and on many other necessities or conveniences which they should enjoy with greater freedom. Perhaps they cannot be told of this too often. The tendency seems to be to suffer these things to continue, rather than to grapple with and correct an admitted injustice.

A SPECIAL correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor, who has made a prolonged trip through the Starving the Farmers farming states of the American Union, has set forth some interesting facts in his articles dealing with the spread of co-operative methods of marketing farm produce. Cotton, fruit, and, to a less degree, wheat, are all being handled by co-operatives, to the material advantage of the farmers participating. But while Mr. Odell has made out a good case in support of co-operation, all of his allegations against the old, slipshod method of general competition pale before a picturesque illustration, furnished by The Outlook, of what selling his product through the ordinary channels may mean to the farmer.

In the current number of that publication appears the facsimile of a check, and statement, sent to a North Dakota farmer in full payment for four carloads of potatoes. The check amounted to ONE DOLLAR AND THIRTY CENTS!

No allegation was made by the commission firm that the potatoes were not in good condition. In fact they were sold at 80 cents per hundredweight gross, bringing for the entire shipment $336. Of this freight charges consumed more than half, or $180.60. The commission charges were $42, while other items appearing among the deductions, more or less cryptic in significance to the uninitiated, footed up more than $110. For plowing the land, sowing, tending, gathering and shipping the crop the farmer received $1.30. The railroad had $180.60 for hauling it to market. The commission merchant took $42 for making the sale. The rest of the purchase price was consumed in fees and allowances.

This is no isolated instance of the cruel losses sustained by American farmers. Today's press reports tell the story of a Virginia woman, who found pinned to a potato a note from its grower in Michigan, saying, "I got twenty-four cents per bushel. What did you give?" The buyer had paid $1.20 a bushel. The cases are in many respects typical. And while the farmer received for his crop barely one-fortieth of the cost of the sacks that held it, people in all parts of the country are paying heavily for the food it did not pay him to raise. How long, in the face of such conditions, may we expect to maintain a farming community at all?

Conditions such as this among the farmers are of vital importance to the business health of the entire Nation. The person who sent the statement to The Outlook sent also a check in payment for a subscription, which was for almost four times as much as the farmer got for his four carloads of potatoes. What hope can manufacturers have of disposing of their goods when the disparity between the result of a farmer's labor and the output of a factory-hand is so great? What possible ground is left on which to deplore the "drift to the cities," which might better be described as a flight from penury?

The remedy? It is not apparent. The most promising thing in sight is the extension of co-operative systems of marketing produce. One thing is certain—namely, that no nation can endure in which the primary producer of wealth is unable to earn a livelihood.

AN INFORMAL and unofficial referendum has been conducted by the Lucy Stone League, so called, in an effort to ascertain the temper of public sentiment in the United States regarding the advisability of encouraging women to retain, after marriage, their individual family names. How thorough the effort has been does not appear, but it is known that the views of many public men have been sought, evidently with the assurance that the ex-

The

Lucy Stone

with the assurance that the expressions of opinion would not all be in favor of the plan which the league is attempting to further. Eventually, perhaps, there will be made public a compilation of the views expressed, but it should be made perfectly clear in advance of such disclosure that the opinions expressed, whatever they may indicate, are in no wise conclusive or indicative of the wishes or prejudices of the American public.

No questionnaire thus voluntarily distributed can call forth a fair expression of opinion, no matter what the subject considered. It is absolutely impossible to conceal the bias or the desires of the organization initiating the referendum. Furthermore, the selective process when lists of names to which the query is to be directed are made up, is influenced by the desire to appeal as generally as possible to those who will be inclined to vote in the affirmative, as it were. And beyond this is the tendency, pardonable, perhaps, but hardly commendable, to refrain from expressing an opinion opposed to the plan for which approval is sought. The "ayes" are nearly always vehement and assertive, while the "contrary minded" are frequently silent. It is quite probable that the "silent" or unresponsive voters to which any questionnaire is referred might nearly all be counted as opposed to the plan for which indorsement is sought.

Press dispatches recently quoted from the reply of Mr. George W. Wickersham, former Attorney-General of the United States, to the request from the league for an expression of his views. It was not announced whether this letter was made public by the officers of the organization or by Mr. Wickersham himself. He was emphatic in his disapproval of the plan, declaring the belief that "nothing more mistaken was ever advocated." No doubt the league would be able, if it saw fit, to counteract this single expression of disapproval by quoting the views of other persons to whom the questionnaire has been sent, and this it will no doubt do in due time. Of course Mr. Wickersham's is not the only vote received.

But there will be many others who will share the view expressed. The movement has not become a popular one, though sometime it may. Feminism, as that doctrine is taught and practiced, is not supported by those convincing arguments which have won the people of the world, in ever-increasing numbers, to a recognition of the rights of women to full political equality. The distinguished gentleman who so outspokenly disapproves the project fostered by the Lucy Stone League has expressed his individual opinion only, but it may be that he has made articulate the sentiment of a large number of voters who have preferred to remain silent rather than parade a negative view.

Its fallibility admitted, even by those who have defended and promoted it, the Schick Test, so called, has been denied the popular approval sought for it among the parents of school children in Oakland, Cal. Confronted by a determined effort made by a few medical doctors to obtain official sanction for applying the test to all pupils in the schools, the opponents of the plan have forced the admission from its advocates that research and experimentation have not proved, even to their satisfaction, that the test can always be relied upon. Thus compelled to admit the weakness of their position, the doctors behind the scheme have proposed to compromise by providing that submission to inoculation and the subsequent tests be made optional.

Nothing particularly enlightening has been disclosed by these admissions. It has long been known by those who have labored ceaselessly and unselfishly to prevent the general infliction of this barbarous test upon the children in American schools that the agitation was but another phase of the determined effort of the representatives of organized medicine to tighten their grip upon public thought by arousing senseless fear. The important thing is that the people of Oakland have proved the possibility of doing just what the people of nearly every city or community want to do and should do. They have, by presenting a united and continued opposition, found the weak places in the apparently impregnable armor of the medical monopolists. They have stood upon their rights, knowing their position to be unassailable, and have won against what appeared to be considerable odds.

The lesson is a valuable one to the people of every community in the United States. The tactics employed in Oakland can be used in similar campaigns elsewhere. It is not always the Schick Test. In some states it is vaccination. In others it is some form or method of so-called immunization, but always hedged about by some form of preventive medicine in the shape of serums, toxin-antitoxins, or alleged beneficently disposed germs or infusions. All these processes, or nostrums, are fallible, and admittedly fallible. Few medical doctors will care to insist that they obtain, according to their own standards, anything approaching an unfailing reaction to their medication, in whatever form it is administered. An intelligent public opinion, aroused to this understanding, is powerful enough to protect itself against an assault which is ineffective because of its own admitted weaknesses.

Editorial Notes

Publication recently of an anniversary number of The News Herald of Franklin, Pa., to mark the completion by "Jim" Borland, its managing editor, of forty-five years' service with it, recalls the part he has played in the successful struggle to expand a four-page sheet into a large daily. His paper started as The Evening News in February, 1878, being launched as a candidate for public favor with the statement at the head of its columns: "The only daily paper in the world edited, printed, and published entirely by boys." Its subsequent history is an inspiring romance of difficulties overcome. It has always been a clean home-folks newspaper, upon the development of which Mr. Borland has strongly left his impress. He deserves the heartiest congratulations of all who appreciate his achievement.

RECENT "stock-taking" by the members of the graduating classes of Amherst College, Amherst, Mass., from 1895 to 1906 shows that ten of the eleven men picked by these classes, from their records while in college, as most likely to climb to the top of the ladder of achievement, have actually arrived there, in accordance with the forecasts of their associates. This fact throws an interesting sidelight on the contention of those who hold that college education does not make for success. Incidentally, Calvin Coolidge, who was graduated from this college in the first year named, was not regarded by his classmates as a likely prospect.

Those who recall their pleasure in reading, as boys, various "wild west" novels will heartily agree with the opinion expressed recently by George H. Locke, chief librarian of Toronto Public Library, that the tendency of boys to read this class of literature is merely an expression of the universal desire for freedom from convention, and does not make for depravity. "It is the emotional stuff that does the harm," he explained, "and more harm is done by suggestiveness than by anything else." If a little more trust is placed in the innate decency of the youth of today, it will be found that his tastes on the whole need not cause his guardians undue alarm,

America at Lausanne

THAT the great American Republic, which always tends to assume leadership in humanitarian movements and which made a conscious effort to co-operate in the establishment of durable peace in the Near East, should have exerted the preponderance of its influence for disagreement and confusion would be a strangely cruel paradox, and yet misgivings on that score will not down in the light of the published and confidential reports to The Christian Science Monitor from its special correspondent at the Lausanne Conference and other European representatives.

The course of negotiations at this international gathering responded in barometric fashion to the fluctuating degrees of allied unity and American co-operation. When the Allies worked together and received genuine support from the American delegation, the Turks, despite Bolshevist instigation, negotiated in a conciliatory mood so that disputed points were disposed of by agreements which registered progress. When the Allies fell out over relatively unimportant matters or when, as unfortunately happened, one or more were unfaithful to the pre-conference understandings on twelve points—the first of which was the maintenance of a united front—when the Americans spoke unconvincingly, or opposed the Allies in attempts to secure economic privileges without obligations or responsibilities, then the Turks became arbitrary and defiant. Thereupon ensued deadlocks or, worse still, compromise upon compromise at Turkish dictation.

Thus, the "Lausanne failure" may be divided into two parts. The first comprised the series of surrenders by which the draft treaty, submitted by the Allies to the Turks, came very properly to be regarded as an instrument of questionable value even if signed. The second part consisted in the inevitable rupture following the refusal of the Turks to agree to juridical capitulations and the economic clauses of the treaty. This last move they did not make on their sole initiative. They were supported, of course, by the Bolsheviki, but they relied mainly on allied disunity, of which they were shown indications from French and Italian quarters, and upon American impotence or unwillingness to co-operate, due to isolation tendencies, anti-British animus, and the influences of commercialism.

The Americans, nevertheless, exercised a helpful influence in many crises notably those concerning the Straits, protection of minorities, and the Greek Patriarch. They protested most eloquently against "the exchange of populations." The leaders of the delegation, Mr. Child and Mr. Grew, were clearly anxious to do all they could to help in this emergency but they were obviously restricted in innumerable ways.

A further disturbing factor was Anglophobia, which was manifested at influential points in the American delegation. Co-operation where co-operation is vitally needed cannot successfully be achieved where antipathy is constantly being poured out from at least one side. American Near East relief workers and educators have expressed regret that Admiral Bristol, American High Commissioner at Constantinople, and his staff should be so anti-British as seriously to jeopardize all possibility of joint action in this field between these two great nations with so many interests in common particularly in the Near East.

The British at Lausanne, of course, understood the situation. Speaking of Admiral Bristol, a prominent member of the British delegation said: "We know he dislikes us. For our part we do not trust him." One of his subordinates, who frequently interviewed the Turks in behalf of the American delegation, was said by an allied expert to have been "mixed up in a number of deals with the Turks which embarrassed the Allies at critical moments." This same individual later on, at approximately the same time when Ambassador Child was striving to persuade Ismet Pasha to sign the treaty, was heard to say: "I'm still hopeful the Turks won't sign. I know them well and like them. I think it would be a shame if they were forced to sign this British treaty."

Finally there was commercialism. The American formula of the "open door" in the Near East is simply the bald proposal that, although the United States refuses to assume or divide the burdens, obligations, or responsibilities which may attach to Near East privileges, American commercial interests are to be accorded a share of the privileges just the same, and that this doctrine applies inexorably to the far-famed oil fields of Mosul. In pursuance of this policy the American delegation opposed the Allies on the economic clauses of the draft treaty. The Turks were promptly unyielding on this point, which was one of the two upon which the conference finally broke down. A representative of American oil interests, who swooped down on the gasping remains of the conference after the rupture, announced that he was negotiating with the Turks directly, and expected to secure terms "better for us" than those which could have been obtained otherwise.

Treaty or no treaty, the Lausanne Conference, like other such post-war efforts, will have fallen far short of its objective, namely the establishment of a just and durable peace. Perhaps, however, an intelligent nation may be expected to profit somewhat by experience. It is possible, therefore, that thoughtful Americans will ponder the lessons of Lausanne and, when next their country undertakes the rôle of participant in a peace conference, insist that steps be taken to restrain provocative spokesmen, who derive their inspiration either from outworn prejudice or else from some of those newer influences such as organized agencies or elements in the population devoted primarily to using America to favor or injure some other nation.

Two Men and Their Work

And yet all the material development of North Carolina would have been in vain but for an incident which should be writ large in state history, writes Robert Watson Winston in The Nation.

A barefoot boy in his humble home is practicing writing these words: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party." His father has just sold a little piece of land and the County Squire has come to take the signature of the little boy's mother. "You sign on the second line, Madam, just under your husband, please." "I cannot write my name, I will have to make my mark"; and the boy is listening to the conversation. Not boastingly, but just to show the impelling power which made him pledge his life to the cause of education, Governor Charles B. Aycock, North Carolina's "educational Governor," once related this story, and added, "I then and there made a vow that every man and woman in North Carolina should have a chance to read and write."

The new amendment to the Constitution required that white boys and black boys alike, after January, 1908, possess certain educational qualifications as a prerequisite to the ballot. It was then that the voice of Aycock, like the crack of a new saddle, aroused the people as never before, bringing compulsory education, a six months' school term, and farm-life schools throughout the State: "I tell you men that from this good hour opposition to the cause of education must be regarded as treason to the State. People charge me with spending great sums of money in the cause of education. I admit it; I am going to keep on doing it, and if I don't spend more it will be because I haven't got any more to spend."

McIver, laboring for the education of women, himself a college mate of Aycock, declared: "When you educate a man, you educate one person; when you educate a woman, you educate an entire family."
